The Hulme CanAm gears up for limited production

Denny Hulme, proud Kiwi and winner of the 1967 F1 Championship, liked to drive barefoot, a practice that saw him labelled with the catchy moniker ‘The Barefoot Boy From Te Puke’. Innocent days, friends, innocent days. But now his (real) name has been revived to christen a new supercar, built in the great man’s honour.

Hulme Supercars Ltd was created by racing fanatic Jock Freemantle in 2003, and the CanAm, shown here, is the product of six years’ work. And as you can see, plenty of hours have been invested in this orange homage to New Zealand’s only F1 champion. The two-seater weighs only a tonne thanks to its carbon-composite body, giving it a top speed that cosies up to 200mph. Not only that, it also makes 0-60mph in less than three seconds, which would certainly ensure an intimate encounter with that pure New Zealand air.

After years hidden in the workshop, the company is now ready to roll out the CanAm, with an estimated production run of 20 a year. Prices at present are settled around the £425,000 mark – relatively affordable if you’re happy to re-mortgage your home and family for your hobby. Alas, for poor old Hulme, he’ll never see his motoring namesake, having died of a heart attack while racing a BMW in 1992. Still, we’re pretty sure he’d be proud of this powerhouse.

200mph tribute to F1 legend hits the road

The Dutch team’s new bus: obviously too small

Words: Nick Grounds   Photographs: Getty Images

Endurance Test 4: shopping with your girlfriend

Dreading the thought of hitting the high street with your partner? Head&Shoulders is here to help

We men must endure many things. One of the most trying can be shopping with our better halves. That said, there are a few simple ways to survive the day without tearing your hair out, regardless of how strengthened it is by new Head&Shoulders Hair Endurance.

Give some positive and confident feedback – if you say something’s just “OK”, you’ll be there all day. If you’re not above a spot of subterfuge, book a table or a movie for the early evening, giving you a cut-off point to make your getaway. And if you can guide your beloved to a department store, why not use the time to go off and look for a new tech product?

What’s more, by using Head&Shoulders Hair Endurance, you will have the power to tackle dandruff and hair fall due to breakage, providing you with thicker hair and the extra confidence to deal with the most challenging shopping expedition.